Brazil left the 26th United Nations Climate Change Conference (COP26) how it entered: discredited internationally due to its environmental policy. Germany and Norway, the main donors of the Amazon Fund, paralyzed since 2019 due to poor governance from the Ministry of Environment and the accelerated destruction of the biome, are waiting for an indication of how the commitments made by the country at the conference will be implemented. Until this happens, the resources remain frozen. The Brazilian commitment to reduce 50% of the country's greenhouse gas emissions by 2030, for example, is not only insufficient, but also anachronistic, since it uses a calculation baseline from 2005. The research institute WRI Brasil reaffirmed the insufficient character of the Brazilian goals: "Brazil reached the end of this COP26 with the same level of ambition that it committed to in Paris six years ago."
